DEDICATION

I dedicate this book to my cousins, my sisters, my nieces, and nephews who so ably assisted me in making this family tree possible.

We Cochrans are proud of our name. We feel we have a right to be proud. Our illustrious name is recorded in the annals of early family histories.

In tracing our ancestry, we find the pedigree of the Cochrans as early as 1374. We learn the Lord Cochrans lived in Paisley and Ochiltree, Scotland.

In this family tree we shall see the Cochran coat-of-arms—three boars' heads in a field of blue. Also our family crest is here pictured, a horse passant—a heraldic term for beasts in a walking position. When an animal is walking forward with one eye and ear seen, it is said to be passant.

The Cochran motto, which in the early fourteenth century was Virtute et laborare (with or by virtue and work) is still the motto of every Cochran.

Ours is indeed a family to be proud of. Our ancestors, who came early to America, helped to throw off the yoke of England and to establish and declare this nation—the United States of America.

Among the Cochrans we find warriors, politicians, teachers, preachers, business men, engineers, and farmers. All have been actors on the world's stage and have played their parts exceedingly well.

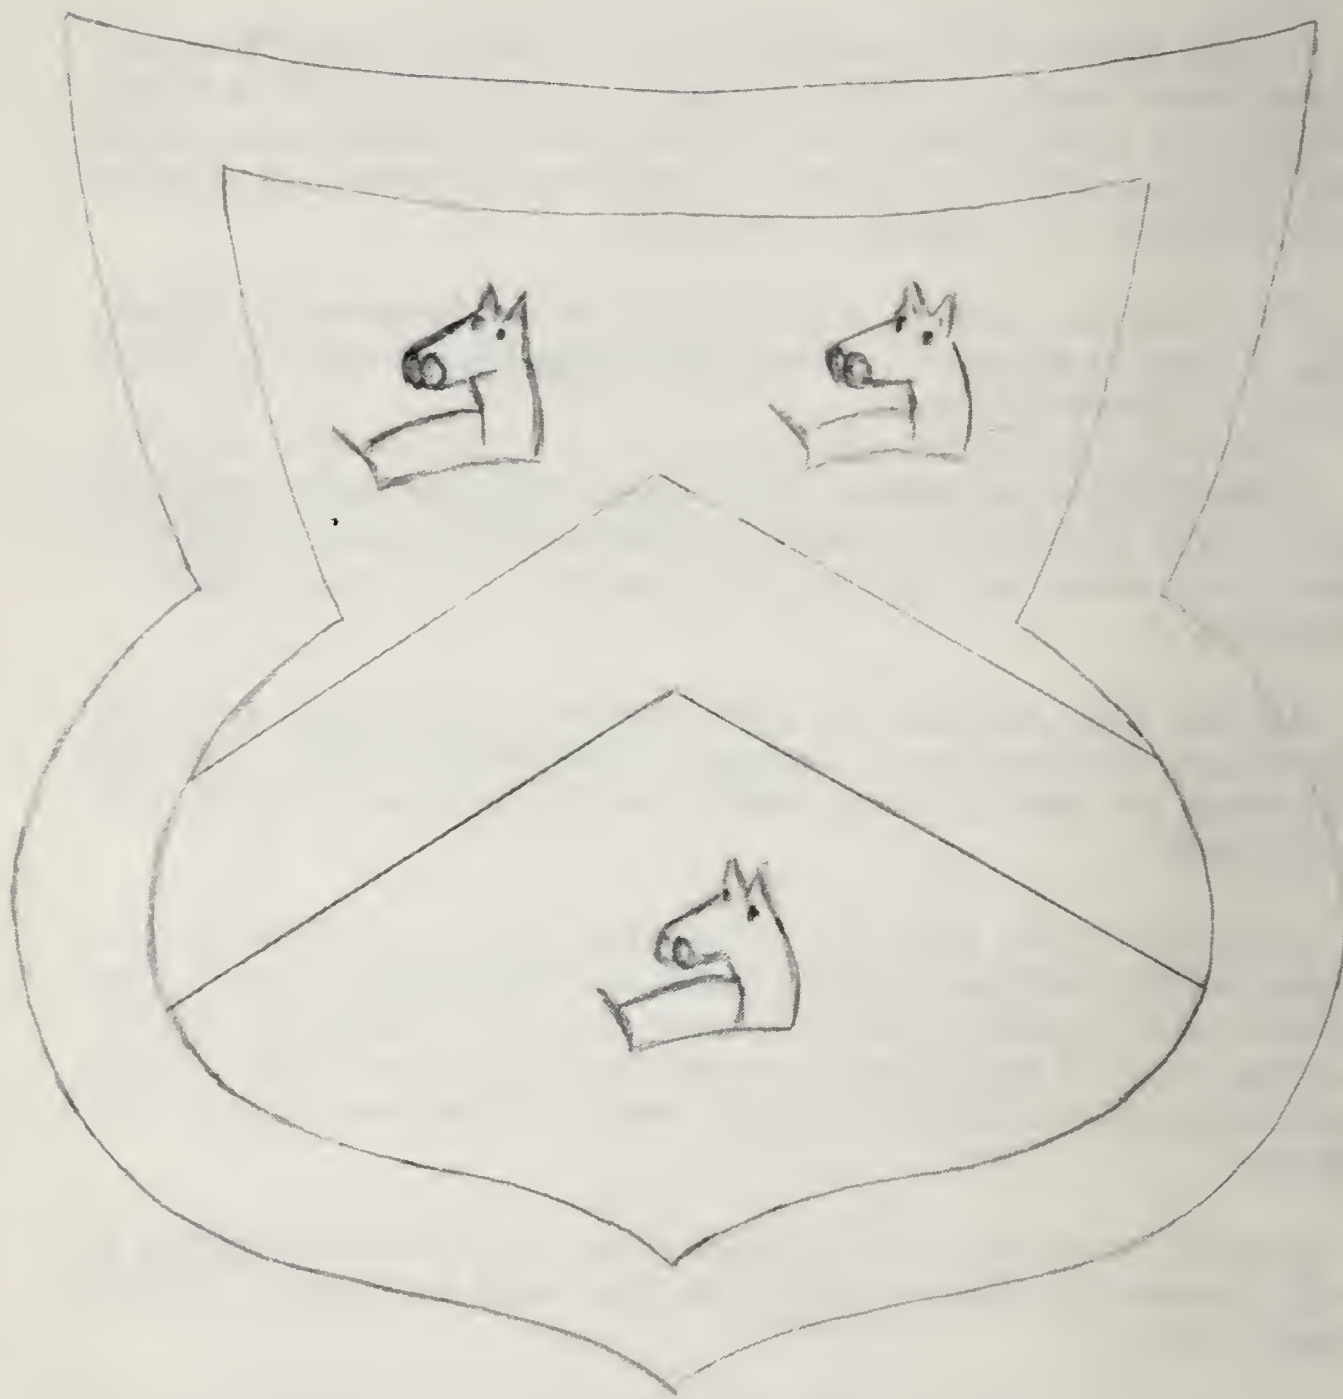

Although much time and effort have been spent in seeking data for the Cochran Family Tree, the results have greatly overcome these factors. While we have had to "bump up" against a stone wall of indifference on the part of some of our friends and relatives, we have felt elated with the interest others have shown.

Several have said, "We think you are foolish in trying to seek knowledge of your ancestors who have been gone so many years."

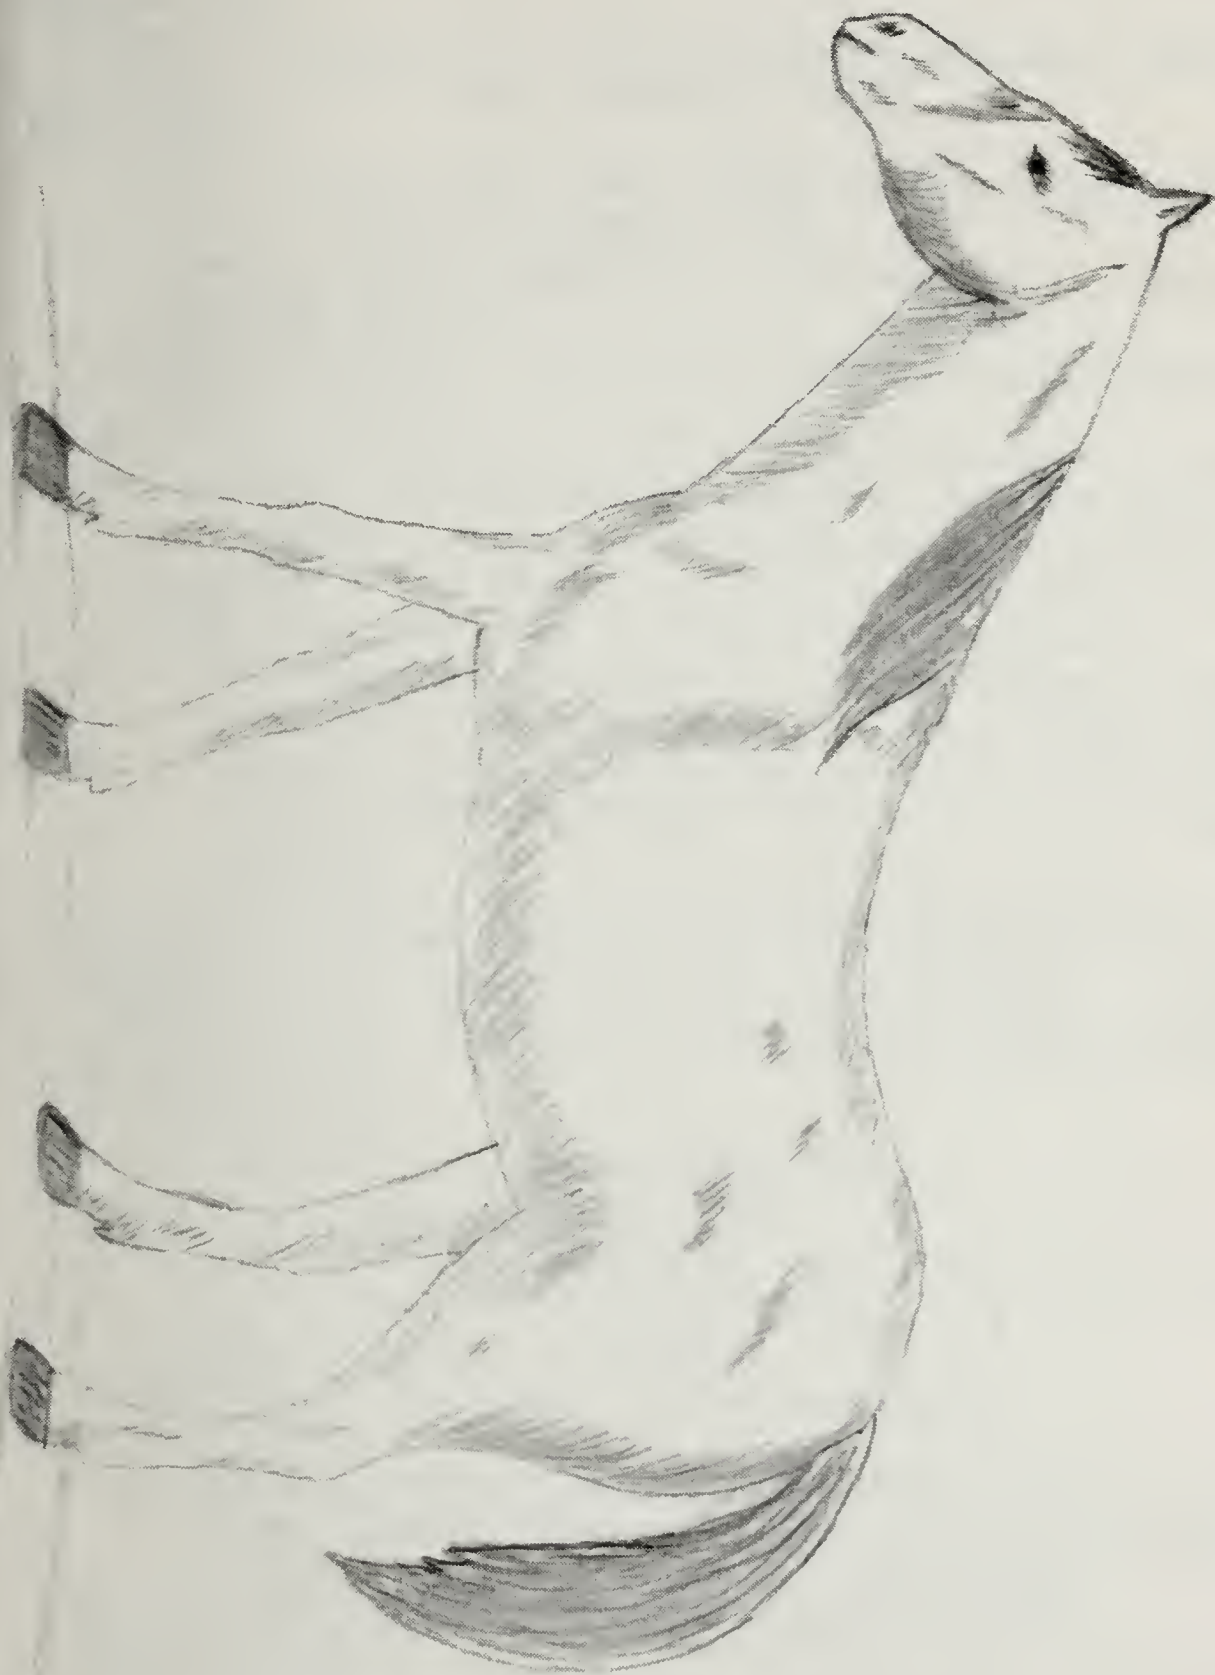

As living members of this once illustrious family, we are "spurred on" by means of the knowledge we have obtained. Again, we have acquainted ourselves with relatives of whom we had never heard until this task was begun. This acquaintance is a reward in itself. Now we feel we belong each to the other, for there is a tie that binds the hearts of the Cochrans together.
